

Contributors

Pedro Ricardo Coelho de Azevedo is Researcher at the University of Trás-os-Montes e Alto Douro (UTAD) and at the Centre for Transdisciplinary Studies for Development (CETRAD), Vila Real – Portugal.

Ioana Baskerville is senior researcher and chair of the Department of Ethnology of the A. Philippide Institute of Romanian Philology within the Romanian Academy – Iasi Branch in Romania, and adjunct professor of cultural anthropology at the Alexandru Ioan Cuza University of Iasi. She received her PhD in Romanian Language and Folklore from the Alexandru Ioan Cuza University of Iasi in 2011. She was a visiting scholar in Germany, England, Poland, and the U.S.A. Her main research fields are: Romanian and European folklore, ethnology, anthropology of religion, anthropology of migration, heritage studies. She is Romania's national focal point for the 2003 UNESCO Convention and has worked on several nomination files for the UNESCO Representative List.

Giovanni Belletti is professor in Agricultural and agrifood economics at the Department of Economics and Management of the University of Firenze. He obtained a PhD in agricultural economics and policy in 1993 (S. Anna University, Pisa). Main research interests: economics and organisation of agriculture and agro-food system, farmers' collective action in agriculture and value chains, alternative food networks and short supply chains, quality issues in agro-food system with specific focus to origin products and geographical indications, rural dynamics and rural development policies, rural tourism and agritourism. Since 1990 has been involved and has coordinated many national and international research projects. He is Author of more than 120 scientific publications.

Letizia Bindi is Associate Professor of Cultural and Social Anthropology at University of Molise. She has been professor in many Italian Universities and as a Visiting Scholar in various European Universities and she's presently Professor at University of Molise. She is a member of main

National and International Anthropological Societies (SIAC, EASA, SIEF, AAA). In 2009 obtained the Tantarri Foundation Prix for Anthropological and Popular Traditions Studies. Since 2018 she coordinated the Erasmus Capacity Building Project 'EARTH' with 12 partners from France, Spain, Argentina, Paraguay and Bolivia and of the Italo-Argentinian Project of Research "TraPP", supported by CUIA/CONICET. She is the Director of the Research Centre 'BIOCULT' on Bio-cultural heritage and local development of University of Molise, Italy.

Kinga Czerwińska is Cultural Anthropologist, Associate Professor at the University of Silesia in Katowice (Poland), where she works. She is associated with the Institute of Culture Studies in the University of Silesia; she was a vice-dean of the Faculty of Ethnology and Education Sciences in Cieszyn (2016 -2020). Member of The Polish Ethnological Society, and other International Anthropological Societies (IOV, SIEF). Research topics: folk art in Poland and East Europe, folk costumes, intangible cultural heritage in modern and globalization world.

Sara Gabellini is PhD Student in Sustainable Management of Agricultural, Forestry and Food Resources at the Department of Agriculture, Food, Environment and Forestry of the University of Florence. She obtained a Master Degree in Governance and Business Management in 2017 at the University of Florence. Also here, she graduated with a Bachelor Degree in Political Sciences in 2012. She had work experiences in both private and public organizations involved in the field of education, bio-cultural valorisation, economic promotion and local development. Since 2017 she has taken part to many EU funded and national research projects related to: rural development policies and human action dynamics, multi-stakeholders' approaches for sustainability transformation in agri-food systems, agrobiodiversity products qualification, marketing and territorial valorisation, participatory action-research and participatory training.

Cinzia Marchesini, is demo-ethno-anthropologist officer at the Ministry of Culture (MiC) at Central Institute for Intangible Heritage" in Rome. She is in charge of protection of demo-ethno-anthropological and intangible heritage of the geographical area of Emilia-Romagna, Marche, Tuscany and Umbria. She is member of several working groups: "Museo nazionale della Lingua italiana", "Habitus. Museo nazionale del costume folkloristico", protection and safeguarding of the cultural heritage of folkloristic groups, "I giochi di Carta". She collaborates with the Audiovisual laboratory Archive, the Prints Cabinets, the IMC-Italy project of "Many Cultures" and member of the editorial committee of the "Visioni d'Archivio series". She deals with heritage anthropology, landscape anthropology, heritagization processes, social use of cultural and landscape heritages.

Wladimir Mejía Ayala is associate professor at the Pedagogical and Technological University of Colombia. Agroforestry engineer and PhD in Geography, he is interested in the relationship between tourism and intangible heritage. Currently, he is the academic coordinator of postgraduate studies in geography (Uptc-IGAC agreement) and editor of the magazine Perspectiva Geográfica.

Oliver Müller is junior research fellow within the DFG project: "Participative development of rural regions. Everyday cultural negotiations of the European Union's LEADER programme" and PhD candidate at the University of Bonn. He holds a BA in European Studies from Maastricht University and an MA in Cultural Anthropology/European Ethnology from the Goethe-University in Frankfurt am Main with a minor in Human Geography. Before joining the University of Bonn, he worked as a freelance research associate in urban studies for the OUI – Open Urban Institute (Frankfurt am Main), the University of Art and Design (Offenbach/Main) and the Schader-Stiftung (Darmstadt) among others. His research concentrates on participative planning processes, the Anthropology of Politics and spatial research.

Daniele Parbuono, is Associate Professor of Cultural Anthropology and Director of the Demo-Ethno-anthropological Heritage Specialization School (Scuola di specializzazione in Beni demoetnoantropologici) at the University of Perugia. Phd in Ethnology and Anthropology. He was Full Professor at the Chongqing University of Arts and Sciences (China) where, together with Professor Liu Zhuang, he still directs the China-Europe Cultural Heritage Center. He is also Special-Term Professor at Sichuan University (China). He is a member of SIAC (Italian Society of Cultural Anthropology), ICOM (International Council of Museums) and AISC (Italian Association of Chinese Studies). He is co-director of the book series "Heritage. Antropologia, musei, paesaggi", Pàtron, Bologna; he is member of the Editorial Committee of the book series "ITACA – Itinerari di antropologia culturale", Morlacchi, Perugia; he is member of the Scientific Committee of the book series "Proposte di Storia", Pàtron, Bologna. He is also member of the Editorial Team of "ANUAC. Rivista dell'Associazione Nazionale Universitaria Antropologi Culturali" and the Scientific Committee of "EtnoAntropologia". His research interests concern demology, migration, political anthropology, museums, linguistic and cultural heritage with particular attention to the processes of patrimonialization in Europe and China.

Roberta Raffaetà is Associate Professor at University of Cà Foscari, Venezia, Department of Philosophy and Cultural Heritage. Her Research projects have been funded by EU (Marie Curie e ERC) and by Fulbright. Her main research interests are at the interface between environmental anthropology, medical anthropology and anthropology of science.

Ivo Povinelli, Chiara Dallapè, Lorenzo Baratter are respectively Director, Permanent collaborator and Adjunct Researcher at the Trentino Pro Loco Federation - UNPLI Trentino Alto Adige Committee. Their theoretical background refers, in order, to social psychology, sociology and historical sciences.

Claudia Ranaboldo is pedagogue with specialisation in cultural anthropology and rural sociology. She has been working for more than 30 years in Latin America, building bridges with Europe. She has directed NGOs and has been a public authority in the areas of rural development, gender and environment. She has coordinated for 12 years the Territorial Development with Cultural Identity Programme, and has been a principal investigator of Rimisp-Latin American Centre for Rural Development. She has developed studies on issues related to agro-ecological scaling up, networks and sustainability, territorial development, empowerment of rural women, strategies for the valorisation of cultural heritage and biodiversity. She has extensive experience in consultancy in these areas, collaborating with national and international agencies.

Silvia Scaramuzzi is Associate Professor in Agricultural Economics and Agri-food Marketing at the University of Florence, Department of Agriculture, Food, Environment and Forestry and Head of International Relations for the School of Agriculture of the University of Florence. She obtained a Master in Economics at University "La Sapienza" Rome (Italy) in 1989 and a PhD in Agricultural Economics and Policy at University of Bologna (Italy) in 1994. Her research activities are centred on: rural development with specific attention to rural tourism and agri-tourism, biodiversity and conservation; the role of credit as a tool of agricultural policy; the economics of quality and valorisation of typical agri-food products; the analysis of the agro-industrial system and its components. She contributed to more than 120 collective works and papers.

Paola Scarpellini is researcher at the Department of Economics and Management of the University of Firenze, she obtained a PhD in Agricultural Economics and Policy at the University of Bologna in 2005 and a MSc in Human Settlements and Environment at Pontifical Catholic University of Chile in 2000. She carries out research-action in the field of rural development, agrobiodiversity and multifunctionality, new welfare models in rural areas, dynamics of social and economic innovation and social farming. She provides technical assistance in regional and national projects aimed at carrying out territorial diagnoses, network building, co-production of knowledge and the development of innovative practices. She is member of Italian Agency for Responsible and Ethical Countryside and Agriculture (AiCARE).

Jacopo Trivisonno is a young anthropologist especially engaged on studies about territory, people and their customs. Born in a quaint city in the southern-central Italy, he was inspired to base his research on pastoralism, new peasants and territorial development. He achieved graduated in Ethno-anthropological disciplines at 'La Sapienza' University in Rome. He's presently enrolled in a Master in "Digital Territories. ICT, Social Innovation and Networked Heritage Communities" at University of Molise, Italy.